

Make. Feed. Gather.

Art is how we make sense of being alive. Food is how we sustain each other.

Community is what happens when those two things share a table.

How we build.

Nothing is permanent.

Like a gallery.
Exhibitions come, people love them, they evolve.
The space is always becoming.

Community-built.

The kids build the kids area.
The community runs the milk bar.
We don't build for people.
We build with them.

Custodianship to community.

We start as custodians of spaces.
We build to hand over.
Our success is measured by our irrelevance.

Residency #1

Drawing from the region's layered industrial past Timber → Dairy → Co-operative movements, the residency situates its work within a long history of community identity, enterprise and mutual aid. Through creative experimentation, Radical Scoops asks how today's communities might continue these traditions of working together.

It's already happening.

Thais — architect, rammed earth, concepts in progress

Joey — builder, on site Thursday

Sabrina — milk bar

Susie — 3 days/week, mid-Feb

Sophie — producer, full-time from March

Leah — kids area, quarterly design workshops

Shaun — Aboriginal oyster farmer, first pop-up

Susie — operations

Cath — garden design, NDIS-accessible

Shaun CD — restaurateur

Not to forget - our parents, kids, friends, ACT project partners, artist, makers and all the Witta community.

A community waiting for a place.

The neighbours are already asking what's happening here.

A welcome committee invited us before we opened the doors.

Homeschooling families are circling. Local makers want in.

Shaun's oysters connect Aboriginal food sovereignty to rammed earth floors shells from Stradbroke Island returning to the ground at Witta.

Council. Licenses. Budget.

Approvals

Council — good progress, fully within remit/ Local Centre Code
Food license — Clear Plains application
Alcohol — application ready for when plans are complete - licence will be for pop up market space in garden and then community hall / venue inside

Rent

5% return on capital invested
Starting at 50% of target
Both sides incentivised — lower spend, lower rent

Investment

Phase 1 ($100K) focuses on outdoor activation and community-facing infrastructure: establishing pathways and garden beds to wake up the former nursery site, constructing the milk crate pavilion as a gathering anchor, upgrading the shed and toilet facilities, and building accessible stairs and entry sequences that invite people in. This phase creates the bones of the site—visible, usable, and immediately activating the front-of-house experience.

Phase 2 ($100K) turns attention inside, transforming the building interior into a functional hospitality and maker hub: kitchen fit-out and commercial hospitality infrastructure, gallery and workshop space preparation, interior finishes including painting and flooring, and the milk bar and café build-out.

The remaining $50K covers contingency, permits, and extended labour as the site moves toward opening. Each phase is designed to generate community engagement and test assumptions, ensuring the build responds to what's working rather than locking in a fixed plan. This is activation as iteration—not renovation as finished product.

Three questions.

Are you comfortable with the direction?

Can we agree on staging and budget?

What does “go ahead” look like?

for all

Persona 1: Chloe, 34

01

Name:

Background: Single parent, works part-time at the Maleny IGA, lives in Witta with her 8-year-old son Cooper

Why she comes:

- Can't always afford to eat out, but wants Cooper to experience community and learn where food comes from
- Values the free community meal and affordable DIY cooking option
- Wants Cooper to be involved in something hands-on and educational outside of school

What she does here:

- Comes Friday evenings for the free community meal with Cooper
- On Saturdays, they pick vegetables from the garden together and cook pizza at the timber pavilion (~$30 total)
- Cooper plays in the kids area while she chats with other local families
- Sometimes volunteers in the garden on Sunday mornings when Cooper is with his dad

Her words: "It's the only place in Witta where we can just hang out and Cooper can run around safely. He's learned more about growing food here in a month than he has in years. And I don't feel judged for not spending big money — everyone's welcome."

Persona 2: Rachel & Tom, late 20s

01

Background: Young couple from Brisbane, moved to the Sunshine Coast during COVID, both work remotely (Rachel in marketing, Tom in software)

Why they come:

- Looking for unique, Instagram-worthy local experiences on weekends
- Love the retro aesthetic and quirky self-serve concept
- Want to support community-focused businesses that aren't corporate chains

What they do here:

- Drive up Saturday or Sunday mid-morning for coffee and a milkshake from the taps
- Browse whatever art exhibition is up in the gallery space
- Buy a slice of local cake, sit at the colorful outdoor tables, and work on their laptops for an hour
- Sometimes bring visiting friends from Brisbane to show off "this cool place we found"

Their words: "It's not trying to be a fancy cafe — it's something completely different. The milk tap thing is genius. We love that it changes every season with new artists. It feels like a creative hub, not just somewhere to get coffee."

Persona 3: David, 58

01

Background: Semi-retired architect from Brisbane, serves on arts boards, passionate about regional development and supporting emerging artists

Why he comes:

- Actively seeks out artist-led dining experiences (previously traveled to regional pop-ups and Attica/Brae-style events)
- Wants to support the intersection of art, food, and community in regional Queensland
- Values the story and intention behind what he's experiencing, not just the food quality

What he does here:

- Books tickets ($200/head) for the quarterly gallery dining experiences when new artist residencies launch
- Brings his partner or colleagues from the arts sector
- Arrives via the dedicated gallery entrance, appreciates the curated intimacy and theatrical staging
- Engages with the artist/chef about their vision and process during the evening
- Often buys artwork or connects the resident artists with his network

His words: "This isn't about Michelin stars — it's about intentionality. Every quarter it's completely different because it's led by the artist. I'm not just paying for a meal, I'm investing in a creative experiment. And it's happening in Witta, not Copenhagen. That matters."

Community Garden

Community Garden

"Access for all" — open 24/7 to encourage community ownership; currently no public park in Witta for people to gather

Community gardens growing all produce for the venues;
two entry points (large path from road, portal through car park); regenerative farm-to-table programming

Garden beds throughout (volume planning with gardener Sophie); ticketed experiences where guests pick vegetables before meals;
open access encourages ownership culture

Pavilion

Pavilion

Tribute to dairy/milk industry heritage (with honest storytelling about colonial legacy and using art for advocacy)

Structure constructed from 1,000 milk crates; community participation project

First residency builds this with schools and young people; collaborative design exploring regional history

Timber & Fire Cooking

Timber & Fire Cooking

Tribute to timber industry; affordable DIY cooking access; honest storytelling (e.g., Barry discussing tree destruction and reforestation)

General store for buying produce to cook on fire; pizza oven; reclaimed timber materials

Make-your-own fire cooking station (affordable tier); source materials from local timber

Phase 1

Phase 1

Kids Play Area

Kids Play Area

Family-friendly
community space; co-creation principle (kids
design their own play spaces)

Integrated play area near pavilions

Community volunteers build;
kids participate in design;
parental responsibility model (legal review needed for fire safety)

Milk Bar

Milk Bar

Paying tribute to historic milk bars; experiential design over hospitality efficiency; minimal staffing needs

Theatrical milk bar with beverage taps (milkshakes, ice latte, ice tea dispensed like brewery); self-serve model; cake/slice from local bakers; retro aesthetic with colorful outdoor tables

Creative concept; one person at checkout; mid-range pricing tier

Simple to start with not much investment

Milk Bar

Theater/Gallery Space

Theater/Gallery Space

Core offering as art/gallery space with food as complementary experience; flexible venue that transforms between seasons; "everything's a gallery"

Performance space with raised timber stage, central fireplace, round tables; turrets/tree houses ("bird cage" seating) with views; converts from theater to dinner mode

Moveable/temporary setup; premium dining (~$200/head) with dedicated entry if pursued; completely transformed between 3-month seasons

Theater/Gallery Space

Theater/Gallery Space

Theater/Gallery Space

Open Kitchen

Theater/Gallery Space

Transparency and connection; chef works closely with gardener on seasonal menus

Open design where patrons see into kitchen; bar area; service entry

Basic equipment for occasional dinners (induction hubs, tabletop fryer, underbench fridges, combi oven) simple commercial kitchen

Artist Residency Workshop

Artist Residency Workshop

Art-led activation;
giving opportunities to people "hungry to do something"; curiosity and experimentation over commercial returns; artist grants
as primary funding

Three seasonal residents (gardener, chef/kitchen, artist) on 3-month rotations;
workshop space for design,
rehearsal, making, performing

Supported by permanent back-office team;
collaborative programming;
dairy/timber art project;
potential collaborators: Gabriella (curator/Cypriot chef),
